SYNOPSIS

Holly Jonas coordinates the Legal Innovation Programme of Forever Sabah (<http://foreversabah.org>), a multi-stakeholder initiative that aims to transform the Malaysian state of Sabah into an equitable, diversified and circular economy. In this interactive session developed specifically for NUS law students, she will talk about how the law has contributed to economic growth but also ecological crises, and how Forever Sabah is using the law to shift the trajectories of the oil palm, forestry and fisheries industries in collaboration with NGOs, indigenous peoples, government agencies, the judiciary, and the private sector. She will also engage students in a discussion about how they can help forge a bold new path for environmental law as a tool for sustainable development through careers both within and outside of the courtroom and other traditional legal paths.
