JONES DAY CALS PROFESSORIAL LECTURE ON THE RULE OF LAW IN ASIA

INTERNATIONAL SANCTIONS AND THE RULE OF LAW

Most international sanctions imposed today are targeted instead of comprehensive. It has become a frequent tool of choice in contemporary international law to meet the challenges to international peace and security. Sanctions are commonly seen as an alternative to the use of armed force. Briefly, sanctions have three different purposes yet are often interrelated: to coerce a change in a subject's conduct, to constrain a subject from continuing to engage in an illegal or prohibited activity and to signal and or stigmatise a subject about violating an international norm.

The Security Council, an organ of the United Nations (UN), has the authority to take non-military measures, such as imposing sanctions to maintain or restore international peace and security. When imposing international sanctions, the Security Council relies on Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter as its legal basis. The most frequent sanctions regimes are those aimed at the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, the fight against terrorism, conflict resolution or support of democratic regimes.

In this lecture, Tun Richard Malanjum, Ombudsperson of the UN Security Council ISIL (Da'esh) and Al-Qaida Sanctions Committee will speak on the relationship between the rule of law and international sanctions, with particular reference to the due process in the ISIL (Da'esh) and Al-Qaida Sanctions Regime and its implications for the sanctioned nationals and entities of States in Asia.
