LAW & RELIGION SPEAKER SERIES

"THE REPUBLIC OF HURT SENTIMENTS": PLACING RELIGION IN A CONSTITUTIONAL DESIGN

ABSTRACT

What should be a suitable approach to place religion within the constitutional framework and how to deal with the excessive exposition of religious sentiments peacefully?

The place of religion in a constitutional design has globally been a contested issue. The necessity of religious ethos is omnipresent in Asian societies, however, the panorama of secularism cannot be ignored either. The pluralistic goals of democracy cannot be attained unless the relationship between religiosity and public law gains a solid ground. The talk will focus on how effectively a religio-secular developing democracy may come to terms with cases of hurting religious sentiments. The talk will draw examples from leading South Asian jurisdictions with a focus on Bangladesh.
