Courts and Democracies in Asia
Associate Professor (Dr) Yap Po Jen
The University of Hong Kong

Chairperson & Discussant: Assistant Professor Swati Jhaveri

ABSTRACT
In his forthcoming Cambridge University Press sole-authored monograph entitled “Courts and Democracies in Asia”, Associate Professor Yap Po Jen explores the role that Asian courts play in the democratisation of their political systems and illuminates how law and politics interact in the judicial construction of constitutional doctrines. In dominant-party democracies (e.g. Singapore, Malaysia, and Hong Kong), courts can only take a limited range of actions before their judges outrun the government’s zone of tolerance and the latter retaliates by deploying constitutional or unconstitutional means to discipline the courts. On the other hand, in dynamic democracies (e.g. India, South Korea, and Taiwan), where political power regularly rotates between competing political parties, their courts have more ‘policy’ space as active cooperation between rival factions in the legislature to overrule the judiciary occurs less frequently, especially since constitutional review by an independent branch of government provides a form of insurance for political parties when fortunes turn. In such circumstances, their courts have more opportunities to innovate and make systemic changes to the electoral system. Finally, in fragile democracies (e.g. Thailand, Pakistan, and Bangladesh) where the military is not under the firm control of the civilian government and the country regularly oscillates between martial law and civilian rule, high-octane judicial review by partisan or imprudent judges can easily facilitate or precipitate a hostile takeover by the armed forces, and lead to the demise of the rule of law.
